Cardiogenic Shock in 2026: Have We Changed the Outlook?
A. Reshad Garan, MD, MS, FACC

Section Chief, Advanced Heart Failure, Cardiac Transplant, and Mechanical Circulatory Support,
Department of Medicine, Division of Cardiology, Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center &
Associate Professor of Medicine, Harvard Medical School

Provided by the University of Wisconsin–Madison Interprofessional Continuing Education Partnership (ICEP)

Dr. Garan is an Associate Professor of Medicine at Harvard Medical School and the Section Chief for Advanced Heart Failure, Cardiac Transplant, and Mechanical Circulatory Support at the Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center. He earned his medical degree at the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons and completed Internal Medicine, Cardiology, and Advanced Heart Failure and Cardiac Transplantation training there as well. He previously served as the Associate Director of the Cardiac Intensive Care Unit and the Medical Director of the Acute Circulatory Support Program at Columbia University Medical Center. In 2019 he was recruited to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center to lead the Advanced Heart Failure Section and to help launch a Cardiac Transplant Program for the BILH system. His primary focus of research is advanced heart failure and cardiogenic shock. He has authored more than 150 original peer-reviewed manuscripts and has co-authored Societal guidelines and consensus statements for the management of heart failure, cardiogenic shock and the use of mechanical circulatory support devices. He is a member of the executive steering committee of the Cardiogenic Shock Working Group, a multi-national registry of cardiogenic shock patients which has generated numerous important insights into the optimal management of patients' advanced heart failure and cardiogenic shock. He serves as site PI for multiple trials studying device-based therapies in heart failure.
