Current Concepts in the Management of Advanced Lung Disease

SPONSOR:
University of Wisconsin School of Medicine and Public Health Department of Pulmonary and Critical Care Medicine

APRIL 9-10, 2009
The Madison Marriott West
Register early!
Enrollment is limited.
Course Description
Evaluating and treating patients with advanced lung disease presents a serious challenge to practicing pulmonologists and other medical personnel. In many instances accurate diagnosis is the key to providing successful therapy, and many treatment options may be available but are often quite costly. Faculty speakers will examine and discuss important concepts in the diagnosis and treatment of individuals with advanced airway, vascular and parenchymal lung diseases.

Intended Audience
This conference is intended for pulmonologists, primary care physicians, physician assistants, nurses, advanced practice nurses, social workers, pharmacists, dietitians, health psychologists, respiratory therapists and any other health care professional with an interest in advanced lung disease.

Conference Objectives
● To review optimal approaches to the accurate diagnosis of obstructive, restrictive and vascular lung disease in order to facilitate early and appropriate intervention.
● To examine and discuss current therapies for advanced airway diseases including COPD, asthma and bronchiectasis in order to optimize therapeutic approaches to these conditions.
● To review and examine current approaches to the treatment of advanced parenchymal and vascular lung diseases in order to optimize therapeutic approaches to these conditions.
● To examine the role of lung transplantation as a treatment option for end-stage lung disease in order to assist the provider in determining appropriate pre-transplant care and optimal referral for lung transplantation.
