Evidence in Action: A successful training for EBM teachers

UW-MADISON—More than 15 UW Medical School preceptors representing the Departments of Medicine, Pediatrics and Family Medicine spent two days in early October learning the ins and outs of teaching EBM to medical students and residents.
The “Evidence in Action: New tools for clinical teachers” Short Course featured web-based teaching utilizing the Society for General Internal Medicine Evidence-Based Medicine (SGIM-EBM) Internet Desktop and distance education technology including a “webinar.”

SGIM-EBM Task Force faculty led this highly interactive and technologically advanced workshop. W. Scott Richardson, MD, Associate Professor and Internal Medicine Division Chief, at Wright State University School of Medicine directed the course locally. Robert Hayward, MD MPH, Associate Professor at the University of Alberta and Director of the Canadian Centers for Health Evidence taught from Canada, via a “webinar.”

K. Mae Hla, MD, MHS, Professor of Medicine, Section of GIM and Primary Care Faculty Development Program (PCFDP) Co-Director coordinated and co-facilitated the course. Other key PCFDP EBM core faculty co-facilitating the course included David Feldstein, MD, Assistant Professor of Medicine, Section of GIM; Blaise Nemeth, MD, MS, National Research Service Award Fellow and Clinical Instructor, Department of Pediatrics; and Jeffrey Smith, MD Clinical Assistant Professor, Department of Medicine, UW Milwaukee.

The PCFDP also offers a variety of learning opportunities including a yearlong fellowship and outreach education to physicians who teach medical students and residents. The PCFDP is co-directed by Dr. Mae Hla, Department of Medicine, Dr. Craig Gjerde, Department of Family Medicine, and Dr. Patricia Kokotailo, Department of Pediatrics.

For more information about all programs sponsored by the PCFDP, contact Barbara Anderson at 608/265-9253 or bmhause@wisc.edu or visit the PCFDP website at www.pcfdp.pediatrics.wisc.edu.
